"Why is Royalty-In-Kind gas not at the top of Dept of Natural Resources' list to help Alaskans during this particularly trying time?" writes Patrice Lee, long-time coordinator for Citizens for Clean Air, retired science & math teacher, and serving on the Interior Gas Utility Board. (Please note that these concerns are her own, and do not purport to be those of IGU.)
"RIK gas can assist in lowering some of our energy costs..." "The poor and disadvantaged are the ones who are disproportionately affected by bad air quality and all it entails. Energy costs disproportionately affect the poor, including students and those without jobs, those with disabilities, pre-existing conditions, veterans, and the elderly. Covid-19 from winwithoutwar.org: "Today we woke up to headlines that Trump intends to sell the United Arab Emirates (UAE) fighter jets and advanced armed drones confirming yesterday that, "they have the money and they would like to order quite a few F-35s."

"Luckily, this sale can’t happen overnight. A KEY provision in the appropriations bills would ban weapons transfers and sales to Saudi Arabia and the UAE for one year, buying us critically needed time to reassess and reexamine the policies governing these sales long-term.

"Our team is lining up calls with members of Congress and raising the alarm in the media to mobilize public support"

"...The New York Times also reports that in setting up a potential sale the Administration gave a classified briefing about the F-35 to the Emirati military, “disclosing details on one of the Pentagon’s most advanced weapons to a foreign government.”"

"Not only do existing arms sales Saudi Arabia and the UAE routinely violate explicit end-use agreements that dictate who can use U.S.-sold weapons, the U.S. government also becomes complicit in war crimes when these weapons are inevitably used to commit abuses.

"Last year, we came within 14 votes of a bipartisan, veto-proof majority in the Senate to block outrageous sales like this..."

"Tell Bank of America to stay out of Arctic Refuge drilling! Petition here Short film RETURNING TO BALANCE: Climate Change and a Vision for Alaska – watch here" from Fbks Climate Action Coalition
The No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 significantly changed how military recruiters reach teenagers. Section 9528 mandates public high schools give military recruiters the same access to students that college recruiters get, including their personal contact information. Schools became gold mines for recruiting “future soldiers.”...

Recruiters use their omnipresence on campus to build relationships and trust in all kinds of different ways. They may offer to chaperone homecoming events, timekeep at football games, or even give lectures in history or government classrooms.

Education Week reporters in Connecticut found that recruiters made 10 times as many visits to one largely low-income school as they did to a nearby affluent school.

Black, Hispanic, Indigenous, and low-income students were overrepresented among the enlistees most often put in harm’s way...

As early as 2002, recruiters had already begun using e-sports as a platform. Today this effort has transformed into an official Army e-sports team and an Army video game streaming channel, all designed to reach vulnerable youth at an even younger age.

These practices are nothing less than predatory. Research reveals numerous physical and mental health risks from joining the military at a young age—including higher rates of substance abuse, depression, PTSD, and suicide.

Students’ rights to health care, education, housing, and citizenship, among other military “perks,” should not have to be earned by putting their life on the line.

Far more effective jobs guarantees could exist if we invested in them: Education, health care, and clean energy all create more jobs per dollar than Pentagon spending. Yet the U.S. spends

The United States Postal Service [USPS] is under assault... new reports reveal... that after the election, the Postmaster-General, Louis DeJoy, plans to specifically target Alaskans by raising prices for our mail,” writes Alyse Galvin;

"...DeJoy’s potential plans, the people said, also include eliminating the Alaska Bypass program, a federal program exclusive to the state in which the Postal Service subsidizes the cost of freight shipping of groceries and other goods for remote areas to keep its commitment to universal service."

United States Postal Service is essential for Freedom of Speech, accessible and safe Voting, and much more. Unlike the for-profit delivery services, USPS delivers to every single address in the country. Yet it has been under attack for years, and this year more than ever.

"There are several hundred federal agencies, but only one is mandated to pre-fund its employees future healthcare benefits: the Postal Service," per govttrack.us, summarizing H.R. 2382: USPS Fairness Act, which removes this 2006 stipulation that passed the House in February. Alaska Sen. Lisa Murkowski co-sponsors it in the Senate, S. 2965, as well as "joined a bipartisan group of Senators supporting “significant emergency appropriations” for USPS be included in the next relief package...[and] "co-sponsored S. 4174, the Postal Service Emergency Assistance Act, a bill that would establish in the U.S. Department of Treasury the Postal Service COVID-19 Emergency Fund and appropriate $25 billion...."

Audio & Songs broadcast with this week’s Community News:
Hello this is Rob Mulford, the Asymmetric Moose, coming to you with a heartfelt and hardy hello, from my place of quarantine, my little, purple, Rosie Creek homestead, bringing you my picks for the week of August 23rd, 2020.

The homestead designation has long held for me - up to somewhat recent - a kinda spiritual consolation that said, “Robbie, hell, you ain’t so bad. You’ve shunned those things of wanton waste, the racket makin’ gas-guzzlers. Ya might still read the paper, but ya blew up your TV; moved to the country and ya built ya a home; planted a little garden – complete with a rain-catchment, solar powered drip irrigation system – and ya just brought yourself home with twenty pounds or so of Paonia, Colorado, Peaches. Although the land title, homestead, still comforts me to a degree, it has for me become nuanced, a point that you may or may not gather from the following story.

As I mentioned, I am currently quarantined, a precautionary measure, due to my having returned Thursday morning from a four-day visit to the mountain community of Marble, Colorado. It was, my sixth visit to the area in as many years. The purpose of my visits has been to collect stories from underground coal miners who I worked with some forty years ago, in what was then called Dutch Creek #1 Mine, part of a complex of 5 metallurgical coal mines, owned by Mid Continent Coal and Coke Company, in an area, white peoples history christened Coal Basin.

On this trip I interviewed an old coal minin’ buddy, I used to work with, known as Lead King Paul. Pauli and I have a few things in common. We both left lives in the big city – him from Madison, Wisconsin; me from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania – figurin’ if we hadn’t we’d find ourselves, sooner or later, incarcerated for our growing distaste for the consumptive excesses, waste, and petty narcissisms we saw in what went as society about us. Unlike I, Pauli had not been blessed a family man, and, by nature, he took his social distancing more seriously than I. In the winter, after having worked his five day work week, 7,500 feet deep into Huntsman Mountain, he’d strap on snowshoes, and trudge 8 mountain miles to his circa 1886 cabin, situated on the remote, long abandoned Lead King Mine; returning to work Monday morning. Come spring, he’d quit the mine, returning again in November to repeat the cycle.

I, on the other hand, spent my winter nights with my wife, lovely daughter, and newborn baby boy in our circa 1903 coalmine-camp home in Redstone, Colorado, rustic but still on the road system, 20 to 30 miles from life’s conveniences. I had worked the mine for about a year, when one day the superintendent brought our crew a remote control for the Continuous Miner, the 30-ton machine we used to cut coal from the seam. He told us that we should use it, so we could forgo volley-firing, a safety procedure that mitigated outbursts of coal and methane gas from the mined face, that we called pushes. My job was setting mine roof-support props alongside that machine as it cut coal in the mine’s deepest slope. When I asked the super, “How does this effect my position?” He replied, “Don’t like your job? Quit we’ll replace you, easy”. I did the next day, and they replaced me easily. Six months later a push in the section ignited into a massive explosion killing 15 of Pauli and my friends and fellow miners. Pauli left about a year later to spend his days in Lead King Basin.

In its 30 years of operation the mine took the lives of 47 miners. Those deaths all have an underlying narrative, expressed in a little ditty we miners would recite that went “Production first, safety last, cut that coal, and watch your ass”. As my friend Pauli recently put it, “You got a job to do. Just do it and shut the fuck up! Jesus Christ! What the hell do you think he’s payin’ ya for? It sure ain’t to babysit your ass.”

The narrative has a history. Part of its origin can be found in a hateful little pamphlet, published in 1898, by Elbert Hubbard, titled “A Message to Garcia”. In it, Hubbard extols the heroic Spanish American War exploits of one Lieutenant Andrew Rowan, who Hubbard says took a letter from President McKinley, “sealed it up in an oilskin pouch, strapped it over his heart, in four days landed by night off the coast of Cuba from an open boat, disappeared into the jungle, and in three weeks came out on the other side of the island, having traversed a hostile country on foot, and “delivered his letter to Garcia” the leading general in Cuba’s revolutionary effort to free itself of Spanish Colonial oppression. The pamphlet goes on to accuse the average working person of moral stupidity, infirmity of the will, and an unwillingness to cheerfully catch hold and lift, adding that “A first mate with a knotted club seems necessary; and the dread of getting “the bounce” Saturday night holds many a worker to his place… and the only thing that can impress him is the toe of a thick-soled Number Nine boot.”

Even though the Rowan story was largely a fabrication, the original owner of the Coal Basin mine, John C. Osgood, used it in his company rag, “Camp and Plant” to intimidate his workforce in 1902.

The Rockefellers took over the mine closing it in 1909, and the mine’s original owner went on to be the chief architect of the Ludlow massacre, where the National Guard burned down a camp of striking coalmine workers, killing 13 of their women and children in 1914.
Forty-two years later, a young Navy Lieutenant, John A. Reeves, reopened the mine that Pauli and I worked in. In his book the Mines of Coal Basin, Reeves explained he operated the mine by the principles expressed in Hubbard’s “Message to Garcia”.

But there’s another story. Some say that the tragedies that happened in Coal Basin are part of a curse issued by Ute Indian holy men, condemning all of the whitemans’ efforts in the area to utter failure. And, this may hold some validity. After decades of the whitemans’ broken treaties, the Northern Ute having been driven to their last good hunting grounds, in what then had been designated as the White River Reservation in North Western Colorado, once again, fell victim to the whitemans’ call “Go West Young Man” and its accompanying cries of “Exterminate the red man!” Nathan Meeker, the reservation’s Indian agent, in reports published for public consumption said, “Their needs are so few that they do not wish to adopt civilized habits”, like giving up their lifestyle to be tenant farmers on Meeker’s reservation farm. Saying, “What we call conveniences and comforts are not sufficiently valued by them to cause them to undertake them by their own efforts”, Meeker proposed his solution saying “I shall cut every Indian down to the bare starvation point, if he will not work.”

Denver Tribune editor William Vickers upon reading Meeker’s reports wrote, “The Utes are actual, practical Communists”. Citing what he considered to be Meeker’s failure to convert the Utes, Vickers continued, “utter failure marked his efforts and at last he reluctantly accepted the truth of the broader truism that the only good Indians are dead ones”.

Accused, among other crimes, of setting fire to valuable timber lands, calls went out from politicians, business leaders, and newspaper publishers across the Colorado territory that the Ute had to go. The Ute disagreed. Upon learning that troops had entered the nearby Milk River country, at Meeker’s request to attack and remove them, Ute warriors at the reservation arose, killing agent Meeker and his agency employees, while other warriors fought U.S. troops on the Milk River. This subsequently led to the Ute’s removal from Colorado and placement on arid lands in Utah.

Now a large portion of the White River National Forrest is ablaze, the entire country is threatened by a deadly virus, and dangerous storms are threatening the coasts. Can these also be curses, brought on by the whiteman’s consumptive excesses, waste, and petty narcissisms? Call me a “Practical Communist”, but I think maybe so.

I can’t say that Robert Hunter and Gerry Garcia had anything like my story in mind when the composed the following tune, but to me it seems to fit, “Don’t lend your hand to raise a flag atop no ship of fools.”
